TO MY DOG - BLANCO

By J. O. HOLLAND
My dear, dear friend, low lying here
A willing vessel at my feet,
A glad partner of my hours and days;
My shadow in the street.

I look into your great brown eyes,
Where love and loyalty shine,
And wonder where the difference lies Between your soul and mine!

For all of good that I have found Within myself or human kind
Hath royal form and crown
Your gentle heart and mind.

I scan the whole broad earth around
For that courteous heart, real and true,
Hearst friendly without end or bound
And find the prize in you.

I trust you as I trust the stars;
Nor cruel love, nor scorn of pride,
Nor beauty, nor duteous care
Can move you from my side!

As patient under injury
As any Christian saint of old,
Gentle as a lamb with me,
But with your brothers bold.

More playful than a frolic boy,
More watchful than a sentinel,
By day and night your constant joy
To guard and please me well.

I close your heart upon my breast —
The while you whine and let my hand
And thus our friendship is confessed,

And thus we understand.

Ah, Blanco! did I worship God,
As truly as you worship me,
Or follow where my Master trod?
With your humility;

Did I sit fondly at His feet,
As you, dear Blanco, sit at mine,
And watch Him with a love as sweet,
My life would grow divine.

PUTTING ON STEAM

A Railroad Engineer's Story.

I am a railroad engineer. A way along in 1857, during the recent panic, was running on the F. and C. railroad. The railroad companies were going under in all directions. Every day we heard of new failures, and quite often in a quarter where we least expected it. Our road was generally looked upon as one of the most substantial in the nation; nobody seemed to have any fears that it would fail to survive the general smash up; but yet did not fully share in the general confidence. Wages were cut down, arrears collected, and a great many other little matters seemed to indicate to us that the road had got into deeper water than was agreeable all around. Among other things, the master mechanic had told me in the spring that the company had ordered four first-quality Taunton engines for the fall passenger business. The road was put in the very best condition, and other preparations were made to cut down the time and put the trains through quicker than was ever known before, when the new engines should come. Well, there was but one of the engines came.

I said that there was but one engine came; but she was, in my opinion, altogether the best ever turned out of the Taunton works, and that is saying as much as can be said of any engine. She was put in my charge immediately, with the understanding that she was mine. It was Saturday when she came out of the shop, and I was to take a special train up to Y. The train was to carry up the President and several officers of the road to meet some officers of another road, which crosses ours there, and arrange some important business with them. I had no trouble at all in making my forty miles an hour going out. The engine handled herself most beautifully. We were just holding up at Y when Aldrich, the Treasurer, who had come out on the platform to put the brake on, slipped and fell. As we were still under good headway, he was much injured and carried off to the hotel insensible. According to the President's direction, I switched off my train, turned my engine and stood ready to start back to C — at a moment's notice.

Aldrich's presence was of so much importance that the business could not be transacted without him, so all those I had brought out, except the President and Aldrich, went back to C — on the 3 o'clock express train. This was the last regular train which was to pass over the road until next Monday. Early in the evening I left the machine in charge of my fireman, and went over to an eating-house to see if I could not spend the time more pleasantly than on my engine. The hours dragged themselves away slowly. I was playing a game of dominoes with the station agent when in came Roberts, the President, in a state of great excitement.

"Harry," said he, "I want you to put me down in C — at 12 o'clock."

As it was nearly 11 o'clock then, and the distance was seventy-five miles, I thought he was joking at first; but when we got outside the door he caught me by the arm and hurried me along so fast that I saw he was in earnest.

"Harry," said he, "if you don't set me down in C — at 12 o'clock, I am a ruined man, and this road is a ruined road. Aldrich is dead; but he told me before he died that he had embezzled from time to time $500,000 of our money, and his clerk is to start with it on the 12 o'clock train from C — for Canada. If we don't have that money on Monday morning to make some payments with, the road goes into other hands; and if you put me down in C — at the right time, so that I save my money, you shall have $5,000. Understand it, Harry — $5,000."

Of course, I understood it. I saw now the reason why the wages had been cut down. I understood it all, and my blood boiled. I felt that I would save the road, if I lived, and told Roberts so.

"See that you do it, Harry," he replied, as he climbed up on the steps of the coach which was coupled to my engine.

I sprang up on to the footboard, got up the steam tender to help my fireman, opened the throttle, and, just as we commenced moving, looked at my watch; it was just 11 o'clock, go that I had one hour to make my seventy-five miles in. From Y — to B — there were few curves on the road, but there were several heavy grades. I was perfectly acquainted with every rod of it, so that I knew exactly what I had to encounter, and when I saw how the engine moved I felt very little fear for the result. The road for the first few miles was an air line, and so smooth that my engine flew along with scarcely a perceptible jar. I was so busy posting my self up to the amount of wood and water aboard, etc., that we danced by the first station almost before I was aware of it, having been five minutes out and having five miles accomplished.

"You are losing time!" yelled a voice from the couch.

I had really seen anything. It seemed more like the creature of a wild dream than a sober reality.

And now let me tell you that no engine ever beat the time we made on those fourteen miles. Those great wheels, seven feet in diameter, spun around so swift that you couldn't begin to count the revolutions. The engine barely seemed to touch the track as she flew along; and, although the track was as true as it was possible for it to be, she swayed fearfully, and sometimes made such prodigious jolts that it required considerable skill for one to keep his feet. No engine could hold together if crowded to a greater speed.

"Well, just as I came to a standstill in the depot at C —, the big clock boomed out 12; and the steamboat was getting in time, and nothing to spare. But he saved the money. He found it hid away in some old boxes, as Aldrich had directed him.

OLD HICKORY.

The Attempt to Kill President Jackson.

Andrew Jackson had many bitter enemies. Being naturally a man of violent temper, he had never learned to control himself, and in the discharge of his official duty he had been compelled to give great offense to many who honestly differed from him. His veto of the Bank bill and his prompt measures to put down nullification had inflamed the passions of his political opponents. Many said and believed that he was ruining the country, and he aggravated the feelings against him by his unyielding and imperious manner. A Mr. Randolph, who had been a Lieutenant in the navy and had been cashiered, attempted to pull President Jackson's nose publicly, and report says, more than half succeeded. At least, the President's face was covered with blood. His pride was wounded in this case, but there was no actual danger. "Had I known," said Jackson, "that Randolph stood before me, I should have been prepared, and I could have defended myself. No villain ever escaped me before, and he would not, had it not been for my confused situation." (The President was seated in an arm-chair when attacked.)

Far more serious was the attempt made upon the President's life Jan. 30, 1835. On that day the President and his Cabinet and both houses of Congress met in the hall of the House of Representatives to take part in the funeral ceremonies of a deceased member of Congress from South Carolina. As the President, near the head of the procession, was passing out from the rotunda of the Capitol and was about to enter the portico, a man stepped out of the crowd, and, standing not eight feet from the President, leveled a pistol at him and pulled the trigger. The cap misfired. The man instantly drew a second pistol from under his cloak and again tried to shoot. But the second cap also misfired. President Jackson rushed furiously at the assassin with uplifted cane, and would have felled him to the ground, but, before he could reach the man, Lieut. Gedney, of the navy, had knocked him down, and he was speedily secured. The prisoner, who was an English house-painter named Lawrence Porter, explained his motives in words which apply with singular aptness to the case of the wretched Guteau:

"To say that it is a first attempt will be superfluous; the honorable gentleman at the head of affairs will see that at a glance."

Never go from the editor's head to his heart, and plead poverty. The aspirant is on a level with a begging-letter pleader at once; besides, no editor cares to deal with a contributor who is so wanting in success as to plead poverty.

An editor's judgment may be relied upon; but some will accept what others refuse; so if an article be returned from one office, do not be chary of sending it to another.

A choice of interesting topics and style will only come with practice.

In commencing to seek the favor of editors, let the articles sent be brief; this is important.

See that the production is legibly written, well spelled and grammatical.

It should also be observed that the journal to which the article is forwarded may be one in which a similar style of matter is commonly to be met with.

Above all, let the article stand upon its own merits; never trouble the editor with such remarks as that it comes recommended by a friend of that personage.

To say that it is a first attempt will be superfluous; the honorable gentleman at the head of affairs will see that at a glance."

Never go from the editor's head to his heart, and plead poverty. The aspirant is on a level with a begging-letter pleader at once; besides, no editor cares to deal with a contributor who is so wanting in success as to plead poverty.

Keep constantly writing, have three or four articles at different offices at once; there are publications enough.

Youth's Companion.

TOO POOR TO TAKE THE PAPER.

Now and then we receive a letter in card with the above statement, and asking us to stop the paper; but is the statement true in a single instance?

Those who say so feel that way, no doubt and believe it to be true, but they are mistaken. No man or woman is too poor to take a good family paper, no matter what his or her circumstances.

I believe we would have gone these ten miles with the same speed as before, but, through the carelessness of the fireman, the fountain-valve on the left-hand-side of the engine got opened, and the water rose in the boiler so fast as to run the steam down to 100 pounds before I discovered where the difficulty was. At first Roberts didn't appear to notice the decrease of speed, and kept at work at the wood as for dear life. But presently he looked up, and seeing that the speed had decreased, he shouted:

"Harry, we are stopping!" and then, coming over to where I was, he said: "Why, here we have been ten minutes on the last ten miles, and I believe we will come to a dead stand if something is not done!" The speed is continually going down.

Lawrence was placed in an asylum.

The inscriptions of the Globe that he was the agent of a conspiracy obtained no general credence. But Jackson himself always insisted that able minds than Lawrence had instigated the assault. Miss Martinet, who witnessed the funeral ceremonies and had a confused view of the exciting scene when the President was shot, at writes in her "Retrospect of Western Travel."

When I got to the White House I took the widest possible notice to the President of the imminent attempt of Lawrence, but the word rolled his lips. He protested, in the presence of many strangers, that there was insanity in the case. I was silent, of course. He professed that there was a plot and that the man was a tool, and at last quoted the Attorney General as his authority. It was painful to hear a chief ruler publicly trying to persuade a foreigner that any of his constituents hated him to the death, and I took the liberty to change the subject.

Just then we passed the next station, having taken nine minutes for eight miles. We were now more than half over the road; but we had lost nearly ten minutes time and had only 15 twenty-seven minutes to do thirty-seven miles. In I had shut the water off from both my pumps a little distance back when I discovered what was the matter, and she was now making steam finely down a slight grade. From less than 100, with which we started over that ten-mile stretch, she had 200 pounds before we finished it, and, as the gauge indicated no higher than that as the valve was tied down, I could not tell how much over 200 pounds she carried; but she certainly carried none less the remainder of the journey. And well she might carry such an enormous head of steam, after passing over that ten miles in eight minutes, then lay ten miles of five-feet up grade, and fourteen miles of twenty feet to the mile depression between us and C —, and it was now 13 minutes to 12 o'clock.

A VENACIOUS EDITOR.

The editor of the Petroleum Pearline is evidently not considered by his townsmen to crowd the lamented George Washington very hard on the score of veracity. The other day two of his principal advertisers walked in, and said:

"Howdy, Major? I want you to answer a question; just despite a little bit, you know. Now, sir, be so kind as to pay particular attention; and think before you speak. Did it rain this morning?"

"Why, of course it did!" said the political thunderer, much surprised.

"Exactly, much obliged," said the citizen, with a relieved expression.

"You see Judge Parker beat me $40 that you couldn't tell the truth on any subject, and under any circumstances whatever, and I took him up. Come out and take a drink." And, as the winner further agreed to pay his back subscription out of the stakes, the Major concluded to call it square. — San Francisco Post.

REJECTED POEMS.

The Boston Transcript gives three columns of "rejected poems" with this introduction:

"Nothing gives an editor more genuine pain than to reject poetry, and yet the limits of the ordinary newspaper are such that a great deal goes into the waste-basket which, if printed, would furnish unalloyed delight to critical and sympathetic readers. Enough rhythmic sweetness is annually wasted in the offices of a literary newspaper to perfume the desert of Sahara. An idea seems to have nothing to do with poetry, and yet it is not poetry, as we have shown, but the trouble is simply a lack of appreciation and taste for reading. The great mass of our people do not read at all. It is a bore to them. They are absorbed in making cotton and selling goods, and the man who tells you that he has no time to take your paper, or is too poor to take it, will fight his way to the ticket box, to pay $3 to see a theatrical lumber, and will think nothing of paying $5 or $6 to take his family into a circus as often as one comes around. And, more disconcerting yet, many men will give you the same ex-cusade, and yet spend day after day around a village or city grog shop, and any one day's expenditure for whisky and cigars would more than pay for the paper a whole year. But this is not all.

He is too poor to pay $2 or $3 for a hat to place upon his boy's head, nor is his wife too poor to pay any amount for her own cranium, but they are entirely too poor to pay only a dollar or two for something permanent and lastingly beneficial to go on the inside of their poor empty heads. These facts are very discouraging to publishers, and the whole press should endeavor to correct this fatal trouble among our people.

WRITING FOR THE PRESS.

Young writers should bid themselves of the popular notion that an article has only to be written and sent to the editor to have it published and the author made famous. The few practical hints given in the following paragraph may smooth the obstacles in the path of the young aspirant for literary honors, while they encourage him to walk in the right way.

A first article pretty sure to be rejected; perhaps the second, third, fourth and maybe more. The reason is not far to seek.

Editors, like the heads of other professions, choose experience. They have never a lack of matter to pick from;

rather the contrary; and in the interests of the readers of their publications they insert the best.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

FOREIGN.

Mohamed Pasha and his fellow-conspirators will be sent into exile.

Mirahil Bazaine, a celebrity under the empire of Napoleon III., is desirous of returning to France to receive a legacy which has been bequeathed to him. Popular feeling is against him, however, and governmental permission will not be granted.

A bright young German army officer was slain in a duel at Berlin, and a student at the University of Gottingen was mortally wounded in an affair of honor. At Gibraltar two Spanish officers fought; one being killed and the other severely hurt.

Duke Augustus of Saxe Coburg Gotha, is dead.

The English Government is not satisfied as to the loyalty of Irishmen, and has concluded to maintain the present military and police garrison at its full strength for some time to come.

A French filibuster off the Tunisian town of Gabes on the 26th of July and landed a force without opposition. Two adjacent villages had to be taken by assault, in which the French had seven wounded. Two hundred sailors occupy Gabes.

Bremen reports the departure from that port for the United States during the past six months of 77,305 persons. It is predicted that Germany will, during the year, lose 335,000 of her subjects by emigration.

The Spanish Government has demanded compensation from France for those of its subjects who lost their lives and property in the Arab insurrection at Oran, Algeria, recently. The French Government, in reply, declines to do anything more for the Spaniards than for its own colonists—the amount of damage to be decided by an international commission. Very strong feeling prevails against France by the Spanish people, which the least imprudent act might easily awaken.

A battle took place on the 27th of July near Candahar, Afghanistan, between the troops of the Amec Abdurrahman and the force of Ayoub Khan. In the first a regiment of the Amec's troops deserted and went over to the enemy, whereupon the remainder of the troops fled, leaving guns, ammunition, etc., on the field. The British officials in India are greatly concerned over the news. The triumph of Ayoub Khan means to them the triumph of Russia, and Ayoub at Candahar means Russia at the gate of India.

An outbreak has occurred at the Mexican Indian Agency, and two flocks have killed two Mexican families and some Americans in Tularosa canon. The nearest troops are at Fort Stanton.

Montpelier, the home and birthplace of President Madison, has been sold at auction for $20,000 to James L. Carrington, of the Exchange Hotel, Richmond.

Mr. Van Marter, city editor of the National Democratic, Peoria, Ill., says that the internal machines captured by British officials were manufactured in Peru under a Director of the Association of United Irishmen, who lives there.

Secretary Windom has instructed 160 Collectors of Customs at Boston and New York to endeavor to ascertain the name of the contraband of the internal machine, which slipped to Liverpool from this country.

FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

—One of the most hopeful signs of a permanent prosperity for the railroads, subject to the condition of the credit, is the evidence that the companies are equipping themselves with substantial facilities. Of the total mileage 33,679 miles were laid with steel rails, and the statistics show a vast increase in locomotives, cars, depots, sidetracks and other facilities.

—The St. Joseph fruit region of Michigan has neither pencils nor blackberries to ship to market this year, but the crop of whortleberries is immense.

During the fiscal year 13,700,000 postal cards were sold at the Chicago postoffice. The largest number was sold in New York city, Philadelphia ranked second, and Chicago was third.

—One hundred counties in the region adjacent to Kansas City report a largely-increased acreage in corn, but figure out a smaller supply of hog meat.

—The increased valuation of taxable property in Iowa, over and above last year, is approximately ascertained to be $16,500,000.

—The succession to the vacancy recently left of Justice Clifford, is already discussed by the newspapers. Each of the New England States will present one or more candidates, among whom ex-Attorney General Devens and Chief Justice Gray, of Massachusetts, are already conspicuous.

FIRES AND CASUALTIES.

—The burning of the mills of the Pennsylvania Paper Company, at Lock Haven, Pa., entailed a loss of $100,000.

—A fire on Peter street, New Orleans, destroyed property estimated at $100,000.

—Andrew Johnson, John Howard and Joseph Yates, boys, were drowned at Fall River, Mass., while bathing.

A Canadian farmer living on the line of the Kingston and Pembroke railroad was attacked by a bear, torn to pieces and almost eaten before assistance reached the bush where he had fallen.

—Fire losses: The Boston Rubber Shop Company's works, at Malden, Mass., $70,000; Gates & Crellin ship yard, at Wilmington, Del., $20,000; the cotton warehouse of A. P. Wright & Co., Thomasville, Ga., $100,000; a chair factory at Union, Pa., $50,000; a furniture factory at Richmond, Ind., $50,000; a factory at Halifax, Pa., $35,000.

—A tornado swept over a portion of the State of New York, and spread itself generally over the New England States, demolishing barns and other buildings, and greatly damaging the growing fields of grain.

—A construction train on the Richmond and Allegheny road jumped the track near Bent Creek, Va., by which two laborers were killed and several persons wounded.

—A fire at Catford, Ojio, consumed sixteen buildings, including a bank. The loss is estimated at $75,000.

—Eighteen buildings in Cattaraugus, N. Y., were swept away by fire, causing a loss of $75,000.

—Two freight trains collided on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, near Rye, N. Y. One of the conductors was killed and others were severely injured.

—The person who stole $200,000 from the Matanzas (Cuba) Bank have been captured, and some of the booty has been recovered.

—Bremer reports the departure from that port for the United States during the past six months of 77,305 persons. It is predicted that Germany will, during the year, lose 335,000 of her subjects by emigration.

—The Spanish Government has demanded compensation from France for those of its subjects who lost their lives and property in the Arab insurrection at Oran, Algeria, recently. The French Government, in reply, declines to do anything more for the Spaniards than for its own colonists—the amount of damage to be decided by an international commission. Very strong feeling prevails against France by the Spanish people, which the least imprudent act might easily awaken.

—The former Treasurer of Stark county, Ohio, is serving a term of twelve years for a defalcation of $50,000. An investigation just made shows a deficit of $11,700 in the accounts of the present Treasurer.

—A reward of $50,000 has been offered by the Governor of Missouri for the arrest of the man who robbed the Rock Island train at Winona, Mo. This amount was contributed by the leading railroads running through the State.
